The Completing Touch In Home Refinement . .

A GRAND PIANO!

TO SAY that a person shows refinement, does not necessarily imply that he or she exhibits unusual knowledge of the arts, but rather, through the arts, this person has attained the quality of true appreciation.

Naturally enough, refinement is invariably found in a musical atmosphere. The presence of a grand piano in a home is bound to lead to a better understanding of music. If not before—soon afterward, and whether the music consists of an hour of old-time songs, the latest hits from a musical comedy, or the sonorous dignity of Bach and Beethoven—all have their elevating effects.

Those who have the music habit enjoy a more complete knowledge of finer things . . . they are living balanced lives, and are better people because of it.

Upon them is the invisible yet evident touch of refinement—the mark of music which can never be erased.
